

Byron Weston, ex-Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts, died of apoplexy last night at his home, in Dalton, Mass. Mr. Weston was born in Dalton April 9, 1832, and after being educated at Easthampton, Mass., and Beloit, Wis., became an apprentice in the paper mill of an uncle at Saugerties, N. Y., where he afterward worked as a journeyman. When the civil war broke out he was working in Berkshire County, Mass. He helped to raise the Forty-ninth Regiment, with which he went to the front as Captain of Company K. After the war he established a paper manufactory in his native town. In 1876 he was elected to the State Senate in the Republican interest. In 1879 he was elected Lieutenant Governor, and served three terms in that position.

Funeral of Major L. F. Hallen.

The funeral of Major Louis F. Hallen, a veteran of the war of the rebellion, was held yesterday afternoon in the Church of the Holy Trinity, One Hundred and Twenty-second Street and Lexington Avenue. The pastor, the Rev. Dr. C. De W. Bridgman, officiated. There was a very large attendance, including delegations from the Old Guard, the Old Volunteer Fire Department, and Enkel Lodge of Odd Fellows. The burial was in Greenwood Cemetery.
